“ I remember back in Iraq we're as assyrian colleagues students mousel, Arbil, and kurkuk joining a party for new assyrian students it was at one of the Arbil banquet hall we got the permit for the party as we have Engegmant party so we can do the party with out government knows the main reason during that party we play the legend song khazade qumo wicked was prohibited in any assyrian party or wedding and the guest stands up and start clubbing majority of guest was students and some of the locals people it was amazing moments since then we choose the king of all the assyrian artists, that happened in 1984 in Iraq

“ Evin used to call me on my cellphone, and as soon as I answered, he would say, “Assyrian Godfather,” which always made me laugh. I would respond, “Malka d’Atouraye.”

Rest in peace, Malka, alongside all the other Malkas our nation has lost. Until we meet again—I love you, and you will forever remain in my heart.

It’s true—you are no longer with us physically, but your presence is felt more than ever. Your voice and your unique legacy will live on eternally. Even the Assyrians will sing your name.
